

To whom it may concern,

It has come to my attention that Stevenson Core is under threat of being dismantled. As a student who has benefited exponentially from the two quarters of core, I would like to state that it would be an act of hypocrisy for the university to break the system apart--placing monetary dilemmas above student prosperity. Stevenson Core is designed to broaden perspectives, enhance knowledge, and create writing skills that are applicable to all future classes (or, at least, these are the elements I have gained through the courses). The intimate class sizes, the accessibility of the professor's assistance, the course content of books, all these aspects of core help students to understand their place in society and their ability to make progressive change. To change the course at the expense of the students would be a great shame to this university. All things considered, I hope the university will keep the best interest of their students in mind when making decisions regarding finances--to practice what they preach. Thank you, and viva la core.

Yours,

A Friendly Neighborhood Stevensonian, Class of 2020
